Scallion dipping sauce

Soy, rice vinegar and gochugaru with plenty of sliced scallions

Makes about 1 litre (4 cups) · Prep 10 min · Rest 10 min

> Draft method for David to check. The vault note lists only the ingredients, so the method is worked out from them and hasn't been tested.

A dip for pancakes and dumplings that also works as a glaze or dressing. Dissolve the sugar before the scallions go in, and slice the scallions thin so they soften in the sauce.

INGREDIENTS

- 500 ml (2 cups) soy sauce
- 175 ml (¾ cup) rice vinegar
- 2 tbsp sugar
- 125 ml (½ cup) toasted sesame oil
- 3 tbsp gochugaru (Korean chili flakes)
- 2 tbsp toasted sesame seeds, crushed
- 1 bunch scallions (about 8), trimmed and thinly sliced

METHOD

1. Dissolve the sugar. In a bowl, stir the soy sauce, rice vinegar and sugar until the sugar has dissolved.
2. Season. Stir in the sesame oil, gochugaru and crushed sesame seeds.
3. Add the scallions. Slice the scallions thinly, in rounds or on a bias, and stir them in.
4. Rest. Leave it for 10 minutes so the gochugaru blooms and the scallions soften. Stir before serving, as the oil and chili settle.

NOTES

- Crush the sesame seeds in a mortar, or rub them between your palms, to release their oil.
- Keeps for about a week in a sealed jar in the fridge; the scallions soften further over time.
- Serve with pajeon or mung bean pancakes, dumplings, tofu or grilled meat.